Room7 provides access to the iWebcam® chat network. Our chat room is one of the busiest chat rooms on the chat service. When you login you have the option to chat randomly with many people from all over the world using a cam, mic and text. From within our chat room you may click the room list option to navigate to the many other chat rooms on the network.People who have created a member profile have the option to create and host their very own chat room. As a room host you will be given host control features to manage your chat room.If you would like to have privacy while you chat then you may use private chat functions or even create private chat rooms. Your chat account may be accessed anytime by clicking the user name badge at the upper left of the chat.Don't forget to invite your friends to join in on Room7! When you come to Room7.com you may view the activity in the chat service but will need to login to interact with people on the service. You may login to the service using a guest access. However, we would recommend that you create a chat profile to enjoy the features of the chat service.Please remember that you may only use your email address for one created member account on the chat service. iWebcam® does not allow you to create a number of profiles using the same email address. We would recommend creating a member profile using a valid email address so that you may receive valuable feedback from the chat service and member contact requests. Once you have created a chat profile on the service you may simply login using your registered email and chat profile password. Please note you can always choose to login as a guest at any time. The "Keep Logged In" feature on the login form allows you to stay logged in to the service on your device when you close the service. When you return the service will automatically log you back into the service using your chat profile. You may opt to not use this feature. However, if you opt to use the feature it may be turned off by logging out of the chat profile before you exit the service. iWebcam® is a progressive web app (PWA) for iOS, Android and Desktops. Erlon Silva/TRI Digital/Getty Images Though the coronavirus vaccines are being distributed nationwide, it's likely going to be a while before we return to our offices and social gatherings in the same way we used to. That means you're probably still spending a lot of time talking with colleagues, family and friends through video-chat and conferencing apps such as Zoom, Microsoft Teams and FaceTime. (If you're using Zoom, here are 15 top Zoom tips, including how to change your Zoom background.) If the webcams you've been eyeing are still out of stock or you just don't want to buy a new one, you can easily use your phone's camera and create one for yourself.As long as the phone you use isn't more than a few years old, image quality should be better than your laptop's default camera, more functional and easier to position so you're not filming your double chin or straight up your nose. Here's how to turn your phone into a webcam for free. You don't even need a webcam appA dedicated webcam app (more below) has special features, but you don't have to have one to use your phone camera for video chats.You can also just launch the app of your video chat service of choice, like Zoom, Skype or FaceTime, and chat directly through there. However, there are steps you can take to make sure that your video quality is the best it can be. Read on.Read more: Best gear for video chats from home: Webcams, lights, mics and more Find and download the right webcam app for Android or iPhoneThere are dozens of free and paid apps that can help you transform your workhorse smartphone into a webcam. Webcam apps for Android phonesI tried IP Webcam (free, or $4 for the Pro version), DroidCam (free, or $5 for the Pro version), and EpocCam Webcam (free, or $5 for the Pro version). DroidCam had the most clear instructions within the app, but only works with Windows or Linux machines. The same was true for IP Webcam. Because I'm using a Mac, I went with EpocCam Webcam. Webcam apps for iPhonesI tried out EpocCam Webcam (free, or $8 or $20 for the professional versions), iCam ($5) and iVCam (free). All were fairly easy to set up, once you find the instructional pages on their websites. EpocCam and iCam work for Windows or MacOS machines, while iVCam works for iPhone ($399 at Amazon) users who have Windows computers, not Macs. (Update: Another option is the NDI HX Camera app -- it formerly cost $20 but is now free, and allows iPhones to be used as HD webcams.)For any webcam appWhatever you download, read the privacy policy, install it and follow the instructions to connect it to your computer (you might have to download a driver, or run it through a browser or other viewer.) You'll be asked to give the app permission to access your camera and microphone. Be awareRunning the app frequently may drain your phone battery, so you may want to hook up your phone to an external power bank or position your setup near a wall outlet if you find yourself in need of a charge. Read more: Ultimate webcam tips: How to look and sound great onlineUse your phone's main cameraYour phone's main camera will produce a higher quality image than the selfie camera, and with more options for zooming and focusing as well. The iPhone 12, Samsung Galaxy S21 and many other premium smartphones have sharper resolution at 1080p than some of the latest MacBook models, which has a 720p webcam built in. For best results for using your phone as a webcam, use that rear camera instead of the front-facing selfie camera. The webcam apps and video chatting apps will often allow you to select options like video resolution, quality and orientation, as well as focus, white balance and color effects. This will give you the least shaky and most professional-looking results. (CNET recommends this $37 mini-tripod from Manfrotto.)Set up some lightingWhether you're working in a home office, at your kitchen table or on your bed, you'll need some good lighting to make your face look bright, eliminate shadows and maybe hide a wrinkle or two. Consider buying a ring light. (CNET recommends this basic $30 model that comes with 36 LEDs, a clip stand and three light modes.)Invest in a microphoneYour AirPods ($119 at Amazon) or other headphones with a built-in mic will get the job done, but if you're using your new DIY webcam to record something professionally, you should invest in a good microphone. (CNET recommends this Blue Yeti USB Microphone for $130 or this Shure MV88+ Video Kit with Digital Stereo Condenser Microphone for $249.)These tips should help you create a better home office and video conferencing setup, now that just about every meeting is a video meeting -- and potentially help you find a new use for your old phone as well.
